

Chapter Bylaws

The international office does not require that bylaws be written by individual chapters. Each chapter is unique and could conceivably need different governing laws as determined by the international bylaws. Each chapter should identify their own methods for selecting members. Some chapters alter the academic requirements to a higher standard than the international level, or may adjust membership status to suit their needs. At no point can the bylaws be less than the standards determined by International. Because of this, the vast majority of chapters operate under the "blanket bylaws" of the society. This ensures that they are performing up to our level, and also offers a structure to use as guidelines. If significant changes are made to the bylaws provided by the society, it is necessary to send a copy to the international office for executive approval.

The Eta Phi Kappa Pi chapter does not use a different constitution from the International regulations.
